3. Outlook

In the first half of 2024, the Group's profitability margins were in line with expectations and previous years.

At market level, in the first half of the year overall volumes increased compared to the same period of the previous year.

The general market context has not yet fully stabilized; therefore, a more limited volume increase is expected in H2 2024 compared to H1 2024, with a substantial recovery in the following year.

The geographical areas had been characterized by different trends in the first half of the year: EMEA and Asia Pacific showed an increase in volumes, while the US market continued to be characterized by a contraction in volumes.

For the remainder of the year, in EMEA the market of the fibers for garments is expected to recover, while volumes of fibers for carpets are anticipated to remain substantially stable compared to H1 2024. Polymers are expected to continue their announced growth trend.

The United States are expected to witness a slight improvement in both product lines in H2 2024 compared to the first semester.

In Asia Pacific, volumes are expected to be aligned to current year budget estimates.
